QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

Do the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution require the suppression of evidence where the affiant police officer on a search warrant reasonably believes information from a reliable informant to be true, but the information, subsequent to the approval and execution of the warrant, proves to be incorrect in part.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT PENNSYLVANIA

Petitioner, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, respectfully requests that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the Judgment and Opinion of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania entered in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The Opinion of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania has been reported at 412 Pa.Super Ct. 92, 602 A.2d 1323 (1992) and is set forth in full in Appendix A of this Petition. The Opinion of the Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County is set forth in full in Appendix B of this Petition.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Pennsylvania Superior Court was entered on January 6, 1992. That Court refused application for reargument by an order dated March 12, 1992. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court refused review of this matter by an Order dated November 13, 1992. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1257(3).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

United States Constitution, Amendment Four, which provides:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

United States Constitution, Amendment Fourteen, Section One, which provides:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Sergeant John Finnegan of the Narcotics Unit of the Chester Police Department prepared a search warrant and affidavit of probable cause for the search of the residence and vehicle of the respondent, George Clark on June 15, 1990. The affidavit of probable cause was based upon information from a confidential informant who had provided Sergeant Finnegan in the past with information which had led to the arrest of other individuals for violation of the Pennsylvania Controlled Substance, Drug, Device and Cosmetic Act. 35 Pa.C.S.A. §780-113 et seq. The police corroborated some of the information provided the confidential informant regarding the drug activities of George Clark, then applied for the search warrant. The warrant was approved by a district justice and executed by the police. Sergeant Finnegan believed the information from the confidential informant to be true. At the suppression hearing, Clark did not refute the past reliability of the confidential informant, but produced evidence challenging the veracity of the information from the confidential informant in this instance. Based upon this refutation, the trial court suppressed the evidence. The Commonwealth appealed the order of suppression of the Honorable Rita E. Prescott of the Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County to the Superior Court of Pennsylvania which, by an order and opinion dated January 6, 1992, affirmed the order of the Court of Common Pleas. A copy of that order and opinion is attached hereto as Appendix A. The Commonwealth filed a petition for reargument which was denied by the Superior Court by an order dated March 12, 1992. A copy of that Order is attached hereto as Appendix C. The Commonwealth filed a Petition for Allowance of Appeal to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania which, by an order dated November 13, 1992, denied that Petition. A copy of that Order is attached hereto as Appendix D. The Commonwealth now seeks this Court's review of the Superior Court's Opinion and Order.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution do not require that suppression of evidence where no improper or illegal actions have been found on the part of law enforcement officers.

The Pennsylvania Superior Court has decided a question of federal law[1] in conflict with the applicable decisions of this Court by holding that evidence must be suppressed where information from a confidential informant upon whom the police officer could reasonably rely was proven to be incorrect. This extension of the Exclusionary Rule as a sanction, not for the behavior of law enforcement officials, but for an incorrect statement of fact by a confidential informant, is in direct conflict with the prior decisions of this Court.

[1] The Superior Court Opinion purported to base its decision upon the Pennsylvania Constitution, however that was based on the erroneous conclusion that this case turns upon Pennsylvania's rejection of the "good faith exception" to the Exclusionary Rule. In fact, that exception is inapplicable and the only issue presented is whether the Exclusionary Rule extends to conduct by non-governmental informants. The decision is thus presumed to be based upon federal constitutional grounds. Delaware v. Van Arsdall, 475 U.S. 673, 106 S.Ct. 1431, 89 L.Ed.2d 674 (1986).

In Franks v. Delaware, 438 U.S. 154, 98 S.Ct. 2674, 57 L.Ed.2d 667 (1978), this Court held that in challenging the existence of probable cause supporting a search warrant, the veracity of the affiant may be challenged upon a substantial preliminary showing of falsity. This Court further held that only those deliberate misstatements and those showing a reckless disregard for the truth which are material to the existence of probable cause should require the suppression of evidence.

The Pennsylvania Superior Court, in direct conflict with the holdings of this Court, has extended the Exclusionary Rule[2] to require the suppression of evidence where no misconduct by law enforcement officials is alleged or proven, but only by a non-governmental informant. This unprecedent departure from the Exclusionary Rule has so distorted that Rule that grant of a Writ of Certiorari by this Court is necessary.

The instant matter is an appropriate case for this Court to review since the Pennsylvania Superior Court has ignored the plain holding of Franks v. Delaware and extended the Exclusionary Rule to a new area which is contrary to the purpose of that Rule. In view of the widespread and necessary use of informants by police officers in their creation of search warrants, this is an important matter which is appropriate for review by this Court.

CONCLUSION

For all the foregoing reasons, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania respectfully requests that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the decision below.

Respectfully submitted,

Appeal from the Order dated April 10, 1991 in the Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County, Criminal Division, at No. 5577 of 1990

BEFORE: CAVANAUGH, POPOVICH, AND HOFFMAN, JJ.

OPINION BY HOFFMAN, J.: Filed: Jan. 6, 1992

This is an appeal by the Commonwealth from an order dated April 10, 1991 granting appellee's omnibus pretrial motion. On appeal, the Commonwealth contends that the suppression court erred by suppressing the evidence seized pursuant to a search warrant. For the following reasons, we affirm the suppression order.

On June 15, 1990, two Chester Police officers from the narcotics and vice division appeared before a District Justice. They presented an affidavit which recited, inter alia, that a confidential informant (CI) had witnessed appellee within the previous forty-eight hours take orders for cocaine at a housing project where appellee was allegedly selling drugs. The CI observed appellee drive to his residence in a 1970's Pontiac Ventura, get out, enter his house, and return to his vehicle within a couple of minutes with a controlled substance. The search warrant revealed that this CI was reliable in that the CI had provided information about other individuals in the past, which resulted in arrests. A search warrant was issued and executed the same day. A search of appellee's bedroom yielded a white powdery substance, numerous small plastic bags, and a thirty-eight caliber handgun. Appellee was subsequently charged with possession of a controlled substance,[1] possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver[2] and possession of drug paraphernalia.[3]

Appellee filed an omnibus pretrial motion seeking, inter alia, to suppress the evidence seized pursuant to the search warrant. A hearing was held on this motion on November 16, 1990. At the hearing, appellee produced a receipt from an auto service station for work done for George Clark, appellee herein, on a 1977 Pontiac on June 12, 1990. The receipt indicated that the car was to be picked up on June 16 and that, in fact, payment in full was made on June 16 when the car was picked up by appellee's father. This evidence contradicts the statement in the affidavit supporting the search warrant that the CI observed appellee forty-eight hours prior to the execution of the search warrant. Moreover, appellee and appellee's father both testified that appellee did not drive the car at all during the first two weeks of June, again in contradiction to the CI's statements in the affidavit. The suppression court granted appellee's motion to suppress the evidence on April 10, 1991. This timely appeal followed.[4]

The Commonwealth contends that the court improperly suppressed the evidence seized during the execution of the search warrant. When the Commonwealth appeals the adverse decision of a suppression court, we must consider only the evidence of the defendant's witnesses and so much of the evidence for the prosecution as read in the context of the record as a whole that remains

[4] We note that the Commonwealth has certified that suppression of the evidence would substantially impair its prosecution of appellee. See Appellant's Brief at 1. We will, therefore, entertain its appeal. See Commonwealth v. Duggar, 506 Pa. 537, 546-47, 486 A.2d 382, 386 (1985).

uncontradicted. Commonwealth v. Hamlin, 503 Pa. 210, 215-16, 469 A.2d 137, 139 (1983) (plurality opinion) (citing Commonwealth v. Goodwin, 460 Pa. 516, 522-23, 333 A.2d 892, 895 (1975)).

Both the United States Constitution and the Pennsylvania Constitution prohibit unreasonable searches and seizures. See U.S. Const. Amendment IV; Pa. Const. Art. I, §8. The starting point in determining whether a search and seizure conducted pursuant to a search warrant was unreasonable is to question whether probable cause existed to issue the search warrant. See Pa.R.Crim.P. 2003 (a) ("[n]o search warrant shall issue but upon probable cause supported by one or more affidavits sworn to before the issuing authority"); see also Commonwealth v. Jones, 506 Pa. 262, 269, 484 A.2d 1383, 1387 (1984) ("[b]efore an issuing authority may issue a constitutionally valid search warrant he or she must be furnished with information sufficient to persuade a reasonable person that probable cause exists to conduct a search") (citations omitted).

In 1985, our Supreme Court followed the United States Supreme Court in adopting a totality-of-the-circumstances analysis to determine if probable cause exists to support a search warrant. In Commonwealth v. Gray, 509 Pa. 476, 503 A.2d 921 (1985), the Pennsylvania Supreme Court stated:

> The task of the issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical, common-sense decision whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the affidavit before him, including the "veracity" and "basis of knowledge" of persons supplying hearsay information, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place.

Gray, 509 Pa. at 484, 503 A.2d at 925 (citation omitted). However, if a search warrant is based on an affidavit containing deliberate or knowing misstatements of material fact, the search warrant is invalid. See Commonwealth v. Bonasorte, 337 Pa.Super.

332, 347, 486 A.2d 1361, 1369 (1984) (misstatement of police officer); see also Commonwealth v. D'Angelo, 437 Pa. 331, 337, 263 A.2d 441, 444 (1970) (misstatement of police officer). Cf. Commonwealth v. Bradshaw, 290 Pa.Super. 162, 165, 434 A.2d 181, 182 (1981) (court recognized that material misstatements by confidential informant invalidate search warrant).[5]

"A material fact is one without which probable cause to search would not exist." Commonwealth v. Tucker, 252 Pa.Super. 594, 599, 384 A.2d 938, 941 (1978) (citation omitted). An affidavit underlying a search warrant must set forth a concrete time frame in which the confidential informant observed the alleged criminal activity forming the basis for his tip. Cf. Commonwealth v. Edmunds, 526 Pa. 374, 382, 586 A.2d 887, 890-91 (1991) (search warrant was facially invalid because it did not reference time that informant observed activity).

In the instant case, the affidavit supporting the search warrant stated:

> Within the past two weeks the affiant listed on the face sheet of this warrant did speak with the confidential reliable informant also listed on the face sheet of this warrant on several occasions.... The CI stated that he has observed George Clark deliver cocaine on the east side of the city and in the Lamokin Village housing project on several occasions.... The CI stated that Clark delivers the cocaine in a 1970's Pontiac Ventura Dark Gray in color with a burgundy rag top.... The CI stated that he has over heard [sic] Clark take orders from other individuals for cocaine, when Clark has stated that he would go and get the caine [sic]. The CI has followed Clark to 76 West 8th Street where Clark resides. He would enter the house and then return to his vehicle within a couple of minutes with the controlled substance. The CI saw the cocaine in George Clarks [sic] hands.
> The CI saw this in the past 48 hrs.

Commonwealth Exhibit 1 (emphasis added). Thus, the affidavit references concrete time frames of two weeks and forty-eight hours. However, the time references are not factually correct.

The instant affidavit was sworn on June 15, 1990. At the suppression hearing, appellee introduced a receipt from McCauls Auto Service, which established that appellee's car was in the shop for repairs from June 12-16, 1990. Furthermore, appellee and his father both testified that on the Memorial Day weekend about two weeks before the instant search warrant was issued, appellee was stopped twice while driving to work for driving with a suspended license. After the second stop, appellee's father took the keys away from him, and removed the tags and license plate from the car. Both parties testified that appellee did not drive the car at all during the first two weeks of June. See N.T. November 16, 1990, at 14-17, 25, 31-

32. Because of this evidence and testimony, it is apparent that the information provided by the CI with respect to the time frame was inaccurate, and a necessary element of the search warrant affidavit is missing. Moreover, because it would have been impossible for the CI to observe appellee engaging in the conduct described at the time indicated, we can infer that this misstatement was knowingly made. Hence, the search warrant at issue was invalid, because it was based on an affidavit lacking in probable cause.

Nonetheless, appellant argues that Pennsylvania law does not permit an attack on the veracity of the confidential informant, because of the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule[6] applied by this court in [6] The exclusionary rule is "a judicially created remedy designed to safeguard Fourth Amendment rights generally through its deterrent effect." United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 906, 104 S.Ct. 3405, 3412 (1984) (citing United States v. Calandra, 414 U.S.

Commonwealth v. Bradshaw, 290 Pa.Super. 162, 165, 434 A.2d 181, 182 (1981).[7] However, appellant's reliance on Bradshaw is misplaced. Our Supreme Court has recently held that Article I, Section 8 of the Pennsylvania Constitution does not incorporate a good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Commonwealth v. Edmunds, 526 Pa. 374, 382, 586 A.2d 887, 891-92 (1991). The court carefully examined the Pennsylvania did not adopt the exclusionary rule until Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643, 81 S.Ct. 1684 (1961). In Commonwealth v. Bosurgi, 411 Pa. 56, 190 A.2d 304 (1963), cert denied, 375 U.S. 910, 84 S.Ct. 204 (1963), our Supreme Court interpreted Mapp as requiring the exclusion of unlawfully seized evidence. Id. at 64, 190 A.2d at 309.

[7] The Bradshaw court held that although the affidavit supporting the search warrant was based on deliberate misstatements by a CI, it was not necessary to suppress the evidence because the police officer reasonably believed and relied on the statements in the facially valid search warrant. Bradshaw, 290 Pa.Super. at 166-67, 434 A.2d at 183.

principles underlying the exclusionary rule, as well as the history of Article 1', Section 8, and concluded that the rule's purpose was much broader than the analogous federal provision.

Justice Cappy, writing for the majority, noted that while the United States Supreme Court, in United States v. Leon, 468 U.S. 897, 104 S.Ct. 3405 (1984) reh'g denied, 468 U.S. 1250, 105 S.Ct. 52 (1984), was able to find that a good faith exception would not deviate from the Fourth Amendment's purpose to deter willful police misconduct, the same analysis could not be applied to the Pennsylvania provision:

> the exclusionary rule in Pennsylvania has consistently served to bolster the twin aims of Article I, Section 8; to-wit, the safeguarding of privacy and the fundamental requirement that warrants shall only be issued upon probable cause. Commonwealth v. Melilli, [521 Pa. 46, 470 A.2d 457 (1983)]. As this Court explained in Commonwealth v. Miller:

> The linch-pin that has been developed to determine whether it is appropriate to issue a search warrant is the test of probable cause. Commonwealth v. Chandler, [505 Pa. 113, 477 A.2d 851], supra. It is designed to protect us from unwarranted and even vindictive incursions upon our privacy. It insulates from dictatorial and tyrannical rule by the state, and preserves the concept of democracy that assures the freedom of its citizens. This concept is second to none in its importance in delineating the dignity of the individual living in a free society.

Edmunds, supra., 526 Pa. at 398, 586 A.2d at 899 (citing Commonwealth v. Miller, 513 Pa. 118, 127, 518 A.2d 1187, 1191-92 (1986)). In light of this history and purpose, the court concluded that to adopt a good faith exception to the exclusionary rule would "virtually emasculate those clear safeguards which have been carefully developed under the Pennsylvania Constitution over the past 200 years." Edmunds, supra, 526 Pa. at 399, 586 A.2d at 899. Consequently, Edmunds requires us to suppress the evidence seized under the instant invalid search warrant, notwithstanding the good faith with which the officer may have relied on the CI's information.[8] Accordingly, we affirm the order of the suppression court.

Order affirmed.

CAVANAUGH, J. files a Concurring Opinion

POPOVICH, J. concurs in the result.

[8] We recognized that the instant search warrant was issued in 1990, before Edmunds was decided. However, in Commonwealth v. Farrington, ___Pa.___, 595 A.2d 1146 (1991), our Supreme Court vacated a Superior Court Memorandum decision applying the good faith exception where evidence was seized pursuant to an invalid search warrant issued in 1988. The Supreme Court remanded for reconsideration in light of Edmunds. Because the Supreme Court has thus indicated that its unequivocal rejection of the good faith doctrine applies to search warrants issued prior to Edmunds, we are bound to follow it here. In so doing, we are also guided by similar applications of Edmunds by other panels of this court. See Commonwealth v. Bagley, ___Pa.Super.___, 596 A.2d 811, 816 (1991) (police not entitled to invoke good faith exception for evidence seized pursuant to 1989 search warrant); Commonwealth v. Grubb, ___Pa.Super.___, 595 A.2d 133, 136 (1991) (court bound to follow Edmunds in rejecting good faith doctrine).

OPINION

The Commonwealth has appealed this Court's Order of April 10, 1991 granting an Omnibus Pre-Trial Motion of Defendant, Howard Clark, hereinafter Clark. The Motion was argued before this Court on November 16, 1990 raising issues concerning the propriety of reliance by the Chester Police Department on information contained in the affidavit of probable cause. Incorrect statements made by a confidential informant formed the basis for execution of a search warrant where Clark resided. The Court granted the Motion and suppressed all evidence seized during the course of Clark's arrest.

Viewing the evidence in a light most favorable to the Commonwealth as non-moving party, the following facts were established: On June 15, 1990 Chester Police Officer John Kaisner and Sergeant John Finnegan of the narcotics and vice division appeared before District Justice Collins and swore to and signed a search warrant for the residence located at 76 West 8th Street, Chester, Pennsylvania and for Clark.

The Affidavit of Probable Cause was based on the testimony of a confidential informant, hereinafter CI. The CI stated that Clark had been selling both large and small amounts of cocaine in and around the Lamokin Village Housing Project. Clark allegedly had been distributing drugs from a 1970's Pontiac Ventura which was parked in front of the residence. The CI stated:

> The CI has followed Clark to 76 West 8th Street where Clark resides. He would enter the house and then return to his vehicle within a couple of minutes with the controlled substance. The CI saw the cocaine in George Clark's hands. The CI saw this in the past 48 hours.
> Commonwealth's Exhibit 1.

The Chester police did not confirm the observed activities by an independent investigation. A search warrant was issued and members of the Chester Police Narcotics Unit went to Clark's residence. After knocking and hearing no response, the police entered through the unlocked front door. Clark was observed coming down the second floor staircase and detained. The house was secured and a minor female was found in a second floor bedroom. A subsequent search of the bedroom belonging to Clark yielded a white power substance, numerous small, plastic bags and a chrome plated 38 cal.

handgun. Clark was arrested and charged with Possession and Possession with Intent to Deliver 43.1 grams cocaine, 35 Pa.C.S. 780-113 (a) (16), (b) through (f) and Possession of Drug Paraphernalia, 35 Pa.C.S. 780, 113 (a) 732.

Clark filed an Omnibus Pre-Trial Motion seeking discovery of the Commonwealth's files and suppression of the evidence. When argument was heard on November 18, 1990, the Discovery Motion had been satisfied by the Assistant District Attorney for the Commonwealth.

In Clarks Suppression Motion, defense counsel stated that the Chester police relied upon the testimony of the CI without any corroborating evidence.

Defense also argued that the affidavit of the CI was inaccurate regarding drug sales by Clark two weeks prior to his arrest. The CI stated he saw Clark using the Pontiac Ventura to make his deliveries. Defense produced receipts by a local towing and auto service station.

Significantly, defense counsel produced a receipt from McCaul's auto service station (Defense Exhibit 2) for work done on the car on June 12, 1990. According to the receipt, the car was held at the station until Clark's father paid for the repairs in full on June 16, 1990. Defense Exhibit 2 would contradict the statements regarding observations by the CI 48 hours before Clark's arrest.

The Commonwealth argued that the Affidavit of Probable Cause should be considered without collateral defense exhibits. The CI stated Clark was involved in drug activity, and the Affidavit was corroborated in part by a narcotics officer and other sources, that Clark had driven the car before (N.T. 11/16/90, pp. 28-29).

The Court was persuaded by arguments advanced by defense counsel. The Chester police may have relied on the affidavit in good faith, but Pennsylvania required independent investigation in addition to reliance on the words of a confidential informant. Commonwealth v. Yerger, 482 A.2d 984 (Pa.Super. 1989).

In the instant case, the Affidavit of Probable cause fails to support the allegations made by the confidential informant with independent police investigation. Accordingly, the Court held that the warrant was illegal and suppressed the evidence seized pursuant to that warrant.

For all the foregoing reasons, the Omnibus Pre-Trial Motion of Defendant, George Howard Clark was granted and evidence seized pursuant to his arrest on June 15, 1990 was suppressed.
